Join us for a webinar showcasing how schools can be critical partners in the effort to protect students, their families, and their communities from COVID-19.

Despite the nation's progress on COVID-19 vaccination, young people aged 12 and older still have disproportionately lower COVID-19 vaccination rates. By collaborating with key community organizations, healthcare providers, and state and local public health leaders to host school-located COVID-19 vaccination events, schools can help to increase access to and uptake of COVID-19 vaccines for adolescents who need them most. In this webinar, leaders from school districts across the U.S. will share promising approaches, strategies for engaging families and communities to build vaccine confidence, and key lessons learned for hosting school-located COVID-19 vaccination events.
